Jjot is a lightning fast sticky note web application filled with smart features like archiving, search, and sharing. Jjot is very easy to use and understand (which is nice when you're tackling any new web application), but what really stands out about Jjot is its speed. Everything you do on Jjot is satisfyingly snappy, which is so refreshing in an age of bloated web apps. Granted, Jjot's speed might not be enough to make it stand out in the already overcrowded online note-taking and todo applications, but it's on my good list. If you're far behind on your credit card payments, you might find that your debt has been charged off. A charge-off occurs when an account is seriously delinquent — for credit cards, that's after 180 days of not making the minimum payment. Your payment has to be that late before it can be written off by the creditor as bad debt for tax purposes. But even if your bank has written off the debt as uncollectable, you aren't necessarily off the hook. Here are four things to expect if a bank charges off your credit card debt. Considering your account as "uncollectable" is an accounting term, and it doesn't affect whether you owe the debt. Your lender is still entitled to the full amount owed, though it can only collect until the state-mandated statute of limitations expires. Your card issuer may still decide to pursue the debt in full, and it's legally entitled to do so. However, your card issuer might decide not to do the work of collecting the money. Instead, it may hire a collection agency, or even sell your debt for pennies on the dollar. In that case, you'll owe the collection agency, not the bank. Be careful, though: Debt collection scams abound, so make sure the company you pay is the one that owns your debt. Having your account charged off can leave a black mark on your credit report for seven years after the account first went late. That, combined with the records of missed payments that led to the charge-off, will make it difficult to qualify for mortgages, auto loans, new credit cards and so forth. In the meantime, keep all your accounts current and use only a small percentage of your available credit on other cards. If you have overwhelming debt and are unable to make your payments, consider consulting a bankruptcy attorney. If you can't get the debt erased, entering a debt management program or seeking credit counseling may help. A nonprofit advising agency can work with you and your creditors to make a reasonable repayment plan and give you a chance to eliminate your debt. Plus, entering a payment plan won't restart the clock on the seven years that charge-offs stay on your credit report unless you open a new account and roll the debt into it. Finally, if the charge-off was due to a temporary setback, like a layoff or medical emergency, you can try writing a goodwill letter to your lender and asking it to remove the negative information on your credit report. It helps if you can point to a solid history of on-time payments since the charge-off and can give a specific reason for why you fell behind in the first place. One of Samsung's major focuses with its devices has been in getting them to charge faster, and for good reason: battery life is the single biggest issue that customers have with modern smartphones. The Samsung Galaxy Note 4 may have an extra large battery to go with its extra large screen, but it will charge extremely fast. According to Samsung, the device will charge from 0% to 50% in just 30 minutes; so, from "0 to 50 in 30". That is quite impressive given that the Note 4 packs a 3220mAh battery pack. For comparison, the Note 3 needed 55 minutes to reach 50% charge. Samsung didn't get into the specifics of how it was able to get the charging to speed up so much, but we can hazard a guess. Part of the work is done by the processor itself. With the Snapdragon 800, Qualcomm added fast charging to the chip, which made it... well, faster to charge, obviously. Undoubtedly, Samsung has tweaked its own Exynos processor to do the same. Beyond that, it is all about the charger. With the Note 3 and S5, Samsung upped the amperage of the charger that came in the box to 2 amps, and we may see that increased a bit more with the Note 4. We'll try to get more info at the hands-on time, but otherwise, we'll be waiting until the Note 4 is released for answers. Samsung was one of the first to deliver fast charging in its smartphones, first adopting Qualcomm's Quick Charge technology with the Galaxy S5 series, before debuting its own bespoke Adaptive Fast Charge tech with the Galaxy S6. (Image credit: Future) However, in the years since, the company has fallen well behind the pack. Handsets from rival firms, like OnePlus and Huawei, have beaten Samsung to the punch in delivering power more quickly. In turn, that's allowed them to produce devices with larger batteries that don't take as long to top up. Fortunately, Samsung has stepped up its charging game in a big way with the Galaxy Note 10 and Galaxy Note 10 Plus. These phones support 25-watt fast charging out of the box, which — while not the fastest — is much better than what Samsung's been shipping up until now. However, the Note 10 Plus in particular also supports 45W technology as well, with the use of a special adapter than can be purchased separately. That's a first for Samsung, and even better than the 40W charging in Huawei's P30 Pro, which used to be the quickest on the market until now. Here's everything you need to know about fast charging on the Galaxy Note 10 and Note 10 Plus: what comes in the box, what your options are, and how fast the phones charge in the real world. PhoneCharge after 30 minutes, starting from 0% Battery size Huawei P30 Pro 0% 4,200 mAh OnePlus 6T McLaren 66% 3,700 mAh Samsung Galaxy Note 10 Plus (25W) 65% 4,300 mAh OnePlus 7 Pro 60% 4,000 mAh iPhone XR (with USB-C kit) 51% 2,942 mAh Google Pixel 3 50% 2,915 mAh Samsung Galaxy S10 Plus 40% 4,100 mAh iPhone XS Max 35% 3,174 mAh Samsung Galaxy Note 9 34% 4,000 mAh All Galaxy Note 10 models come with 25W charging adapters. Before now, the only Samsung handset to support 25W speeds was the 5G version of the Galaxy S10 Plus. The S10 5G features a 4,500-mAh battery. That's significantly more capacity than the 3,500mAh offered in the regular Note 10, and a bit more than the 4,300-mAh Note 10. Still, with 25W charging, we were able to get that S10 from completely dead to 56% in 30 minutes. MORE: The First Galaxy Note 10 Plus Benchmarks Are In Recharging the Note 10 Plus from 0% with its stock adapter, we were able to get the phone up to 33% after 15 minutes and 65% after a half hour. For comparison's sake, the OnePlus 7 Pro, which offers 30W charging and carries a 4,000-mAh battery, actually fared poorer — 60 percent in 30 minutes. The Huawei P30 Pro, meanwhile, recharged a bit faster, getting its 4,200-mAh power pack to 70 percent in the same amount of time, thanks to the Chinese firm's 40W Supercharge system. What about wireless charging? Neither Note 10 comes with a wireless charging pad, though both devices do support wireless charging at up to 15W speed. Even though that's far from the fastest wired charging possible, that's still pretty good. For example, Google's Pixel 3 can only charge at a max throughput of 10W, and only using Google's proprietary Pixel Stand. Likewise, you'll have to make sure you use Samsung-certified wireless chargers to get the best performance possible. Samsung's Wireless Charging Stand runs $79 (opens in new tab) and supports 15W delivery. Anker's wireless chargers (opens in new tab) are also trustworthy options that cost less than their first-party counterparts, though they are limited to 10 watts. (Image credit: Tom's Guide) Go faster: optional 45-watt charging For 45W charging on the Note 10 Plus only, you'll have to pick up one of Samsung's $50 USB-C Super Fast Charging 2.0 adapters (opens in new tab). While we may eventually see third-party chargers certified for 45W delivery with the Note 10 Plus, there are no alternatives to Samsung's kit we can recommend at the moment. Most of that comes down to the charging protocol Samsung turned to for the 45W capability. As ExtremeTech points out, Super Fast Charging 2.0 is built on a modification of the existing USB-C PD spec that many devices, from Apple's MacBooks to the Nintendo Switch and Pixel 3 and 3a, already use. This tweak, called Programmable Power Supply, is a rare element only found in certain types of PD chargers. Given the vast number of companies out there building fast chargers of uncertain quality, we simply advise going with the first-party solution for now. Some owners and onlookers might be skeptical of Samsung's decision to lock its newest charging technology down in such a way — though when you're pushing 45W power to your $1,000-plus smartphone, the last thing you want is shoddy circuitry frying your investment to a crisp. Samsung tells us the 45W charger won't hit store shelves until closer to the Note 10's launch on August 23. For that reason, we haven't been able to test it out yet — though we plan to update this explainer once we've had the opportunity to try it out. Definition: The musical term whole note, or semibreve, is worth four quarter-note beats and takes up an entire measure in 4/4 time. A whole note is written in notation as a slightly enlarged, stemless, hollow note-head. Two half notes equal one whole note. More Note Values: ■ whole note | semibreve ■ half note | minima ■ quarter note | crotchet ■ eighth note | quaver ■ sixteenth note | semiquaver ■ thirty-second note | demisemiquaver Also Known As: semibreve semibreve (It) ronde (Fr) ganze Note (Ger) Reading Piano Music • Note Lengths in U.K. & U.S. English • Notes of the Piano Keys • Memorize the Grand Staff Notes • Reading Music Rests/Piano Chords • Easy Bass Piano Chords • Chord Types & Symbols • Piano Chord Fingering • Diminished Chords & Dissonance/Reading Musical Symbols • How to Play Dotted Notes • Accidentals & Double-Accidentals/Beginner Piano Lessons • Comparing Major & Minor • Understanding the Key Signature • Types of Barlines • BPM & Tempo Commands • Left Hand Piano Fingering/Piano Care/How to Safely Whiten Your Piano Keys/Learn Ivory-safe methods for brightening up your acoustic piano keys, and find out what you can do to prevent keyboard yellowing. In pitch notation, the notes C4, D4, and B4 all belong to the same pitch class (in this example the fourth octave). • Finding Middle C on Different Keyboard Sizes/It's normal to be confused about the location of middle C, especially on keyboards with fewer than the standard 88 keys. Use this illustrated guide to find middle C and remember its location. ■ (M.S.) mano sinistra: "left hand"; the passage should be played with the left hand. ■ : to play "majestically"; to perform with grand, dignified expression. Maestoso is often used in the title of a musical composition, as in the first movement of Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 21 (Elvira Madigan), Allegro maestoso. ■ marcato: "marked; to make stand out." Marcato refers to both a written/verbal command as well as a musical symbol affecting articulation. Indicates that a note or series of notes is to be played with accentuation. See accentato. Marcatissimo is to make notes heavily accented. ■ martellato: (usually seen as a command for string sections, but has been and can be used to command piano music) to give notes a heavy, hammer-like accent. ■ marziale: "march-like"; see alla marcia. ■ melancolico: "full of melancholy"; to play in a painful, solemn, and mournful manner.
